A HISTORY OF RACE AND RACISM IN THE UNITED STATES

We invite you to L.E.A.D.D.

LEARN

About inequitable patterns of experience and how outcomes are playing out in our ecosystem.

Why an individual's or community's experience affects how you are seen, while respecting the truth that trust has been broken.

How to notice and see the complexities and historical context of any “problem” you wish to learn from and understand.

What your own realities and constraints are with regard to “difference(s).”

Effective ways to articulate “who you are becoming.”

EXPLORE

Ways of building relationships instead of transactional experiences.

The structures and systemic dynamics that are contributing to your trauma/frames/worldviews/patterns of thought and behavior.

How to express and/or share emotions that affect how you show up for justice-centered partnership.

The many ways that your cultural beliefs, worldviews and norms contribute to your biases that stunt relational efficacy.

Your team's health and collective intentions, to ensure your process is liberating for each body.

ACT

On becoming a learner. Not a fixer.

From a place of imagination and dreaming while actively granting yourself permission to experiment, try and prototype with humans at the center.

On the available resources within your sphere of influence to cultivate conditions for partnership and creativity.

On the new harvest from those closest to the pain and furthest from positional power. In intentional ways that produce/design solutions to equal the magnitude of the challenge (internally/externally).

DISCOVER

The importance of making shared decisions with people.

What slowing down to imagine, listen, connect and learn means to those most impacted.

How to acknowledge harms caused to begin collective reconciliation and healing.

How seeing oppressed/marginalized people as creative designers that are capable of doing more for social uplift is “justice doing.”

Your furthest vision for liberation, justice and belonging.

DESIGN

Conditions for strange-making sensibilities. And making sense of the strange.

“What if we” collaborative circles where imagination and prototyping are guiding principles.

Methods that allow all bodies to be active in the learning, trying, failing and doing better.

Research and development opportunities for greater social awareness that breaks “secrecy.”

New ways of measuring impact.
